Comments: The copyright laws in this country are already outrageous, draconian, and tyrannical, and I do not support, nor will I follow, any law that adds additional enforcement or expansion of copyright laws.

In regards to part one, I feel that any alleged losses due to the sharing of files online are negligible in comparison to the record gains from the increase of popularity, free advertisement, and additional sales. There are numerous artists who have gained profit and popularity despite, and even in thanks, online file sharing, including Eminem and Nine Inch Nails. Concerning part two, I feel that the government should support the free exchange of information, by repealing or refraining from enforcing copyright, patent, trademark, and other baseless laws. I recognize that this is very unlikely, and therefore request that you pursue sane forms of enforcement, such as allowing backups of media.
